Bishop Matthew Simpson - a Brief Biography

By John Lyon

On March 14, 2004 Calvary United Methodist Church rededicated the Apocalypse Window. In the center panel is written “In Memoriam Simpson.” What does this mean and who was Simpson?

Matthew M. E. Simpson was born in Cadiz, Ohio on June 20, 1811. (90 years later Cadiz Ohio would be the birthplace of movie actor Clark Gable.)

When Matthew was two years old, his father died, so his uncle Matthew (after who he had been named) raised him. His uncle had served in the Ohio State Senate for ten years and had been a judge in the County Court system. He was familiar with Greek and Hebrew, and gave his nephew many advantages that boys living in the west did not have.

When Matthew was 16, he left home and became a student at Madison College in Meadville, Pennsylvania. (This would later become Allegheny College at Meadville)

Because of his uncle’s early teaching and his hard work and study habits, he became a tutor before he was 19 years old. He also apprenticed himself to a physician. He continued to study medicine, and in 1833 began his practice. At a camp meeting he gave his heart to Christ and began to feel inward pressure to preach. However, Matthew was very shy and this seemed impossible. But he began to speak at religious meetings and gradually gained more confidence. After nine months, he gave up his practice when Charles Elliott, a Methodist educator, asked him to become a circuit rider.

(*See note below) On April 5, 1834, he saddled his horse and rode out on his first circuit.

The shy boy from Cadiz Ohio became a master educator, the most influential Methodist of the day. He was a powerful speaker who never used notes. It was said that audiences wept, clapped and leapt to their feet during his sermons. He was asked to repeat favorite messages over and over again. Abraham Lincoln considered him “the greatest orator he had ever heard.”

Matthew was appointed to Liberty Street Church in Pittsburgh. It was here he met Ellen Verner. They were married in 1835. In 1837 he was asked to become vice president of Allegheny College and a professor of natural sciences.

He accepted the presidency of Indiana Asbury (DePauw) University in 1839. It was during his presidency that he helped change the university from a Methodist experiment in a semi-wilderness to an established four-year college. In his spare time he found time to spy on the increasing student body by posing as student and taking part in “sprees” and to “wage war upon Mrs. Larrabee and her school” (Female Collegiate Seminary in Greencastle.)

In 1844 Simpson was elected to the general conference and in 1848 was re-elected. In 1852 he was elected bishop.

An abolitionist, he became a close personal friend to Abraham Lincoln and often prayed with him at the White House. His powers as an orator made him admired and earned the gratitude of the nation. When Lincoln was assassinated in April 1865, it was Simpson who preached the funeral sermon at the White House and in Springfield. He was the only person beside family members and the honor guard allowed in the private railway car that carried Lincoln’s body to Springfield.

Simpson published several books including Hundred Years of Methodism, Cyclopaedia of Methodism and, after his death, a volume of Sermons was edited by Rev. George R. Crooks. He attended the general conference in 1884 but was in poor health and could not sit through the sessions but his farewell address was well received. Matthew Simpson died on June 18, 1884.

When Calvary Church was built the Verner family, wanting to honor this great man, donated and dedicated the Apocalypse window in his memory. The Apocalypse Window can be found in the west balcony, above the choir loft of Calvary Church. In its time it was the most expensive Tiffany window ever made at a cost of $3,500. The scene depicted in the stained glass window is of Saint John writing the Book of Revelation on the island of Patmos. It relates his vision of the New Jerusalem coming down from Heaven where God will dwell with human kind. This Tiffany stain glass window should be viewed when the afternoon sun shines through, the whole window shimmers with a special golden light.

The restoration of the Apocalypse window at a cost of $226,000 was funded in part by grants from the Pennsylvania Historical Commission ($71,000), an anonymous gift of ($110,000) and the remainder by the generosity of Hartley Walker. Workers from Stained Glass Resources performed the rescue of the window.

*Note: The wide spread of Methodism was made possible by the circuit rider. A circuit rider was an ordained preacher who traveled within his “circuit” usually three or more churches at least one a month. It was also necessary for the rider to carry his supplies with him. Many of the early circuits stretched for hundreds of miles. The circuit could include 20 or more “preaching places.”
